FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

FINANCE During the week business at the banks has been of the quiet order usual in "the dead eason." The supply of exchange is not been of the quiet order usual in "the dead season." The supply of exchange is not large and is growing smaller, but is sufficient to supply the moderate demand. There is abundance of money, but the general inactivity of business brings the demand for loans generally to a low point, although one or two of the banks report tolerable activity of the season. In the local market, there is absolute stagnation. The New York exchange was quoted to day as follows at the places named: Savannah—buying, ½; selling, ½ premium. Charleston, ½ premium, the premium. P. actically, as this scalement shows, cotton prices are what they were a week ago, and the tone of the market remains substantially what it was then, with no new iefficences affecting it. In our own market exporters have decreased their operations, and now spinners are the principal buyers. They have kept up an active industry all the week for bright clean cottons above middling, and would even have paid over full prices for them, but very little of the wanted description was to be found.
